Mount Vernon, the American Shrine

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

America, as some one has put it, has thousands of shrines, but only one shrine. That shrine is Mount Vernon, the home and tomb of George Washington. Upon a commanding site where the view from the lawn sweeps the reaches of the Potomac for several miles, stands today the modest colonial house that was the country seat of the great patriot from his young manhood until his death. There before the marble sarcophagus that holds the body of the President of the United States, and even the most trifling feel that they are upon hallowed ground. As early as 1876 no less than 5,000 pilgrims from all parts of the United States paid their respects there, and thousands of visitors are still going each year.

George Washington was a soldier and statesman because his country had need of his services. He was a farmer because he loved to till the soil, to plant trees and flowers, and to enjoy the quiet of country life. During the span of his years, between the time he inherited the Hunting Creek estate of his half-brother, Lawrence Washington, and the time of his death, he was much away from home, but whenever the opportunity presented itself he returned to his broad acres by the Potomac to resume the life of a Virginia gentleman. "Till it was acquired by the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association to prevent its destruction," Mount Vernon had been in the hands of the Washingtons since the time originated in a patent issued by Lord Culpeper in 1670 to John Washington, the founder of the line. The property was inherited by George Washington when he was in his twenty-first year. He also inherited a fine estate upon the Rappahannock and became one of the large landed proprietors of the Old Dominion.

Until 1753, when he closed his campaigns in the French and Indian war, Col. Washington was almost continuously engaged in military service. He then became a member of the Virginia house of burgesses and took an active part in legislation. In 1759 he married Mrs. Martha Dandridge Custis and brought her to Mount Vernon, where for sixteen years he managed his estate, hunted foxes, and entertained his neighbors at a hospitable board, and enjoyed the pleasures of private life. Put at the end of that time he was made commander-in-chief of the Continental Army, and he saw little of his home until he retired as the most famous soldier of his day, and one of the most famous men in history. For the following five years, Mount Vernon was thronged with visitors from far and near. Washington played the role of farmer and host. He was well satisfied, as testified by a letter to La Fayette, in which he said: "I am now become a private citizen on the banks of the Potomac, under the shade of my own vine and fig tree, free from the cares of the camp and the busy scenes of public life."

Boy in April, 1789, a messenger rode up to Gen. Washington's front porch and made the official announcement that he had been elected President of the United States, and was requested by Congress to assume his duties. Eight years after war, when he was sixty-five years old, he returned again to farm life on the Potomac, but only two years and nine months of life remained to him. During that time it is said he never went farther than twenty miles from home.

The briefest visit to Mount Vernon is sufficient to prove its charm, and to cause the visitor to understand why Gen. Washington was content to live there. Even in those days of great landed estates in Virginia, Mount Vernon, with its 8,000 or 10,000 acres, was a principality. The place was divided into five farms, over each of which an overseer exercised supervision. Each overseer reported to a superintendent, and the superintendent made weekly reports to the proprietor. Upon the estate there were 200 slaves. At his grist mill, Gen. Washington made, aside from flour and meal for the use of persons on the estate, 5,000 barrels of flour for sale. His distillery produced 4,500 gallons of the various farms 600 or 700 sheep. Among the blooded animals were jacks and jennets from Malaga and Spain, sent to Mount Vernon by La Fayette, and presented to him. It was a great plantation, and its affairs were conducted upon the generous scale that obtained among large land owners in the South. As a rule, Gen. Washington spent the greater portion of the day in the fields attending to the duties of a landlord. In the late afternoon he was usually to be found on the wide front porch, where "silly Windsor chairs were kept for the use of such visitors as might chance to drop in.

The architecture of the manor house at Mount Vernon is as simple as were the tastes of its distinguished owner. With nothing of vain display, it speaks of personal refinement and good taste. The house is ideally planned. Its wide, airy hall running through the center, its wide airy and living rooms are all inviting for their comfort. The banqueting hall is somewhat more elaborate, but in it the humblest stranger who was invited to dinner might feel as much at home as La Fayette, Rochambeau, Hamilton, or any other distinguished visitor. The general's chamber, with its great tester bed, was a room furnished for comfort rather than luxury.

"My house," wrote Washington in a letter to his mother after the Revolution, "may be compared with a well-resorted tavern, as scarcely any strangers who are going from North to South, or South to North, do not spend a day or two here." Such was the hospitality of the Washington home. After he became President there were still more visitors. The fact that "Mrs. Washington and I dined alone" was worthy of recording in the former President's diary. Among his frequent guests were his former commander in arms and persons who brought news of foreign officers who had served with him. Interesting light is shed upon life at Mount Vernon in those days by in Raleigh, N. C., is of considerable interest in Washington.

The bride is the daughter of the late Maj. J. C. Winder, of the Seaboard Air Line, and a granddaughter of Gen. Winder, of the Confederate army. The wedding was quite a small one, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Griffin, of the Church of the Sacred Heart, in Raleigh. John H. Winder, of New York, gave his sister in marriage. Dr. Boyland is a native of Ohio, and is very wealthy. He has traveled all over the world, and is a graduate of one of the great German universities.

His summer home is at Coburg, where he spends most of his time in travel. He and his bride met in Canada last summer.

Mrs. Charles E. Vrooman, Edith, Esther, Edwin E., and Henry B. Vrooman are at the seashore enjoying the sea breezes and salt water bath.

Miss Viola Engle, of Capitol Hill, is at a New Jersey seashore resort for a couple of weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Julian Niemcewicz, old camp Koscusko, when the latter was released from prison here, came to America, accompanied by his faithful Niemcewicz, and the latter set down at great length his impressions of Washington's home.

Niemcewicz says the rooms were "neatly and prettily furnished." He dwells particularly upon the beauties of the lawn, the trees, and the gardens, in which his distinguished host took the greatest interest, and of the wonderful fields of corn fertilized with herring. Gen. Washington was particularly fond of showing his guests his well-kept gardens. "The whole plantation, the garden, and the rest, prove well that a man born with natural taste may guess a beauty without having seen its model," says Niemcewicz; "the general has never left his garden, and it seems as if he had copied from the best examples of the grand old home-lands of England." To the visitor from Europe the rigid observance of the Sabbath at Mount Vernon seemed strange. In the evening there was no music, nor even a game of chess. Not a little of the patriot's diary is given up to descriptions of Miss Custis, "a young lady of the most wonderful beauty, whose celestial being so rarely produced by nature, sometimes dreamt of by poets." In the evening Miss Custis played to him upon the harpsichord, and one thought he dreamed was in Poland, but strange to say, felt a regret at being there.

The vault in which the body of Gen. Washington and that of his wife repose is a simple brick mausoleum. The old family tomb was even simpler, and was in such bad repair that Gen. Washington expressed in his will a desire to have a new one built, but his body reposed in the old one for thirty-one years before his heirs carried out the request. The present tomb has an arched entrance covered with iron bars, and within may be seen the massive marble sarcophagus which contains the coffin of Washington. It bears upon its top only the coat of arms of the United States upon a draped flag, and the name "Washington." At its side is a simple altar, and the name "Custis." The two are covered with fresh flowers that are constantly renewed.

Mount Vernon now contains but 200 acres of its original estate. To Mrs. Pamela Cunningham is due a great deal of the credit for having saved the historic homestead to the nation. When John Augustine Washington offered to sell the property, Mrs. Cunningham secured an option upon it, and, after failing to enlist the interest of Congress, addressed an appeal to the patriotic women of America. The Mount Vernon Ladies' Association was formed and the place was bought for $20,000. The largest donation was by Edward Everett, who gave $5,000 to the cause.

It is regrettable that there is little of the original furniture in the Washington home. Soon after Mrs. Washington's death most of it was disposed of at a sale. George Washington Parke Custis bought nearly all of the notable articles and took them to Arlington. Some of them he presented to the government, and they are now in the National Museum. When the Lee left Arlington, during the civil war they had the Washington furniture then owned by that part of this is now owned by the Lee and Lewis families. Among the original articles of furniture are the great carpet woven for George Washington and presented to him by Louis XVI, his mirror, his bookcase, his traveling trunk, and the harpsichord upon which the bewitching Miss Custis played. Mount Vernon may be seen at a great distance from the Potomac, as it stands to-day it is a model country home, white and airy, and joined to the shore by a bridge. The model illustrated fully realizes this ideal, and is, besides, so easy of construction that no home sewer, however inept, need hesitate to attempt it. A novel feature of the sack is the omission of under-arms seams, the back and front being cut in one piece and joined at the shoulder. The sleeve presents the modified kimono shape which is so popular and so convenient. The negligee is modeled in batiste, and trimmed with a row of small, Japanese, cup-shaped or nap's veiling would be equally suitable for its development. For the medium size 24 yards of material 22 inches wide will be needed.

Sizes 22, 24, and 40 inches, bust measures.

Gen. Garlington Promptly Enters Upon Task in the Philippines.

According to mail advices reaching the War Department, Gen. Garlington, who was sent to the Philippines to investigate further the alleged irregularities in the army, reached Manila on July 5, and on the following day entered upon his task. It is charged that a number of officers had a quantity of expensive furniture made at the government's expense for their own use, and for shipment abroad as souvenirs. When the matter reached the notice of Gen. Wood, the latter reported the affair to the War Department and an investigation followed. Secretary Taft then instructed Gen. Garlington to go to Manila and follow up the investigation there begun.

PREVIEW OF US

Amorians Caricatured by the Duca di Cirella.

CARTOONIST COMPLETES WORK

Society of Washington and New York Lined and Satirized in Volume Which Will Be Published in Three Languages—Political and Cartoons Comprise Illustrations.

Paris, Aug. 14.—The "Duca di Cirella," the famous cartoonist, who is now in Paris, has just finished a book on America which is likely to create a sensation.

It is written and illustrated to make one laugh, parts of it are satirical, and the author anticipates that it may anger a number of people, as many Americans, he declares, do not like any one to create a laugh at their expense.

"My observations are derived from living types in New York and Washington," said Duca di Cirella, "and I want the book to be printed as quickly as possible, for the caricatures of such men as Mr. Harriman and Mr. Frick are actualities of the present." He expects to have published simultaneously in English, French, and German, and the first English edition will be 10,000 or 20,000 copies.

Attacks American Smart Set. The Duca di Cirella intimated that in this work he has fired a broadside at the American smart set.

"I have tried to satirize society from a general point of view, although some caricatures may be recognizable," he remarked. "It is rather dangerous sometimes to tell the truth, and the undertaking requires courage. But I have tried to express my opinions truthfully. There is no animosity in English, French, and German, and the first English edition will be 10,000 or 20,000 copies."

Mr. Roosevelt has been caricatured without his teeth showing. Mr. Fairbanks, Mr. Taft, and Mr. Cannon have been caricatured without their teeth showing. In the "financial division," Mr. Morgan, Mr. Harriman, Mr. Rockefeller, and Mr. Frick are all pictured. Others caricatured are Mr. John Drew, Miss Ethel Barrymore, Miss Julia Marlowe, and Miss Maud Adams. In all, there are seventy-two illustrations. But the caricaturist wishes it to be understood that his book is his opinion of America as he has seen it, not an attack on Americans.

No Bohemians in America. "Some Americans amuse me by thinking they are Bohemians. They are no Bohemians in America, for a man with money cannot be a Bohemian, and every body in America either has money or is 'after it.' And America, because money is there held in supreme esteem, has no art of its own. To produce artistic things a man must often lose a great deal of time, waiting for inspiration. In New York this inaction, which allows ideas to develop is impossible, for there the waste of time is a waste of money. America to-day is acquiring art, but not producing it."

"I could not even write my book in American atmosphere. I returned to an island near Venice, and living like a hermit, jotted down my ideas."

WINS BEAUTY CONTEST VICTOR

Man Renews Courtship When He Learns of Girl's Comeliness.

Pittsburg, Aug. 14.—When Charles Appman, a Carnegie Steel Company workman, saw the picture of his former sweetheart in the paper as winner of a beauty contest, he begged to be taken back, and in a whirlwind courtship, won over pretty Anna V. McCarty again, and this afternoon it is announced that they have eloped.

Miss McCarty, who is but eighteen, and a stenographer, was engaged to Appman until some months ago, when they quarreled, and parted in anger.

SIMPLE, PRETTY NEGLIGEE.

The acme of desirability in a dressing or lounging sack is attained only when the garment is at once simple in design, becoming in style, and comfortable to wear. The model illustrated fully realizes this ideal, and is, besides, so easy of construction that no home sewer, however inept, need hesitate to attempt it. A novel feature of the sack is the omission of under-arms seams, the back and front being cut in one piece and joined at the shoulder. AT THEATERS NEXT WEEK.

The final week of the Aborn Opera Company's summer season at the National Theater, commencing next Monday night, will see the presentation of Verdi's grand opera, "Il Trovatore," with Estelle Wentworth as Leonora. To mark the 100th performance of the series Monday night, photographs of Miss Wentworth, with her autograph, will be presented to the occupants of the orchestra seats. "Il Trovatore" was the third opera chosen for the popular vote of the New National clientele a few weeks ago, and is, therefore, the more appropriate as the vehicle for the final bow of the popular Aborn Opera Company in Washington. The management announces that this has been the most successful of all their seasons here. There is no doubt that they have established an enthusiastic following here, who will look forward with much pleasure to their return. Among those who will be heard in the same roles in which they shared the triumphs of Miss Wentworth elsewhere are Harry Luckstone, barytone, as the Count di Luna; Joseph Fredericks, tenor, as Manrico; Nella Shayne, mezzo-soprano, as Inez; Arthur Wooley, in the character of Ferrando; Edith Bradford, in the contralto role of Azucena; William Loughran as Ruiz, and C. W. Phillips as the gypsy. The same entire cast, chorus, and orchestra will appear, intact, at all performances, including the special school children's matinee Wednesday and the regular Saturday matinee.

Miss Charlotte Walker will close her season at the Belasco Theater next week, with a production of "The Marriage of Kitty," a comedy adapted from the French by Cosmo Gordon Lewis, and finally presented by Maria Tempest. The announcement that Miss Walker's season will end Saturday night, August 24, is positive. Miss Walker must retire in order to return to New York for rehearsals of the new play, in which she will be starred early in the season by David Belasco. "The Marriage of Kitty" is a delightful comedy, in which Miss Katherine Silverton, finding herself left almost penniless by the death of her father, comes to London to ask the advice of her godfather, a lawyer. He advises marriage. Fortunately, Sir Reginald Beldale is in a predicament whereby he must be married at once or lose a large fortune. His father will provide that he must marry some one within a stated time, who is neither a Puritan nor a widow, this being the Puritan widow, but Sir Reginald is infatuated with a Puritan widow named Mrs. de Semano. The lawyer plans that Sir Reginald shall marry Kitty, collect the money, get a divorce, and then marry the Puritan widow. But Sir Reginald finds his transitory wife charming, and is quite won by her during a series of very interesting and amusing situations. In the end he elopes with his own wife to escape Mrs. de Semano. Miss Walker will appear in the play, in the role of Kitty, and she will be supported by the Belasco Stock Company. As this will be her final appearance of the summer season, the demand for seats has been largely met. The season will end Wednesday, and at the Saturday matinee, her farewell matinee, Miss Walker will hold a farewell reception on the stage.

That Washingtonians are interested in W. D. Fitzgerald's Kathryn Purnell Company is evidenced by the demand for seats since the opening of the box office at the Majestic Theater yesterday morning. Stage Director Albert Roberts will soon call "perfect" on the rehearsals of "The Christian," which have been in progress. Miss Kathryn Purnell arrived in Washington Sunday after finishing a summer season with the Empire Stock Company at Providence, R. I. Painters, decorators, and cleaners have worked a great change in the appearance of the Majestic. The minutes of the board of directors next Monday afternoon for the first time this season, the cleanliness and brightness will be pleasurable noted. Scenic effects for "The Christian" are about completed, and coming from the brush of Artist Frank Ambros, the public is assured of striking and handsome settings for every stage picture. The mechanical and electrical effects have arrived from Kleig Brothers, of New York.
